Controlling the invasive species is one of Texas Farm Bureau's (TFB) priority issues for the 88th Texas Legislature.

And TFB members like Buddy Earles a South Texas rancher stressed the need for control efforts and explained the severe damage the hogs cause.

explosive," Earles said in an interview Texas Farm Bureau Radio Network. "A lot of people think that by hunting and trapping, we will be able to control the numbers, but we need to get around 75 to 80% killed just to keep the numbers where they're at. He spoke with State Rep. Ryan Guillen, District 31, in February during TFB's Leadership Conference and visits to the Capitol.

"He extremely concerned, was trying to get more information on how to control them and then we were talking about the new warfarin that they're talking about using that it should be one of our new tools that will help us in bringing the numbers down, get a better control on the feral hog problem," Earles said.
