

...Livestock Antibiotics

The labels will be required to read: "Caution: Federal law restricts this drug to use by or on the order of a licensed veterinarian."

"This means you need to work closely with your veterinarian to adjust how your farm accesses animal health products," Tomascik said.

Tomascik stressed the importance of having a veterinarian-client-patient-relationship (VCPR) in order to access the antibiotics.

With a valid VCPR, veterinarians may make medical judgements and prescribe medications, including antimicrobials or antibiotics, for livestock if the veterinarian believes the owner will follow their instructions.

"A veterinarian is an invaluable partner in treating and managing illnesses and infections," Tomascik said. "But more importantly, working with your veterinarian throughout the year will help minimize and prevent disease in your livestock."

The rule does not impact the use of vaccines, dewormers, prebiotics, probiotics, ionophores, topical nonantibiotic treatments and nutritional supplements.

Softball! A Midnight Madness softball tournament to benefit Bronte Little League was held on Saturday, June 24. The Dingers (pictured above) came out on top and all of the players and fans that attended were greatly appreciated.
