Service fire chief, said. "It is vitally important that everyone be mindful of current conditions and remain diligent with any activity that creates sparks."

The heat wave has some areas of the state experiencing record temperatures, and the latest drought report from the Texas Water Development Board shows nearly 70% of the state is suffering from drought.

"Fire danger is high across the state, and there's plenty of fuel to burn. The lush, green vegetation from the spring rains is now dry and catches fire easily," Tracy Tomascik, Texas Farm Bureau associate director of Commodity and Regulatory Activities, said. "Farmers and ranchers are carefully watching their property, crops and livestock to keep an eye out for fire danger."

In addition to wildfire danger, the dry weather and high temperatures have farmers and ranchers carefully monitoring their livestock and crops.

Livestock, plants, trees and other forages and vegetation experience heat stress during the extreme high temperatures.

"Vegetation is quickly drying
